A Report on Sleeper Services

The first paragraph of this report explains why night trains came back. They are slower than aircraft, but a night on board replaces a hotel room, and the journey itself becomes part of the trip rather than something to be endured.

A second paragraph follows after a gap. It is short and ends cleanly.

This last paragraph on the page does not finish before the page ends and so it carries on across the break onto the following page, where it finally comes to a stop.

Costs

A cabin for two costs about 180 dollars. Bookings grew 34% last year.

Conclusion

The sleeper is back, and it looks set to stay.
